

Dear Sir/Madam,

After achieving a master's degree in Languages and Economic and Legal Institutions of East Asia at Ca' Foscari University of Venice, I've lived in China for almost 10 years, where I acquired a considerable experience in cooperating in and managing projects involving local and foreign companies and institutions – mainly aiming at supporting the expansion of their business, finding and dealing with suppliers, and developing official relations – as well as in organizing business and cultural events.

After this wonderful and fruitful period, now I am willing to put myself in the game with a new project, with new stimuli and new targets.

Vietnam is today a fast-developing country thanks to its policies and agreements, which aim at its internal quality growth with a great focus on value-added, high-tech and environmentally sustainable investments and practices. It is also a market with a high growth potential, given it is the 15th most populated country and the living standards are higher every year. In this context, Vietnam's relations with Italy and Europe are progressively strengthening, and I'd be honored to be involved and contribute as a part of the bridge connecting people and businesses.

I like to work in stimulating environments and to be part of teams of people who work with enthusiasm, that are keen on the quality and precision of their job, and that are curious and willing to share and discuss everyone's ideas and inputs, necessary fuel for finding new opportunities, achieving new results and be active part of common improvement.

I am a good listener, and I think this is a very useful advantage in commercial relationships, as well as in managing people and in cooperating with people.

I always keep researching, learning and putting myself in the game in order to accumulate information and experiences related to different cultures and international commercial relations, and to increase specific knowledge.

I remain available to share my references and to provide any clarification or further information.

Looking forward to hearing from you!

Best Regards,
Sara Zago